Florens - dirt floor, Chickens in house

You will squat to read this, Kneel, Jerhaps, in a few places, la pologize for the discomfort. Some times the tip of my Knife breaks and the forming of words is disorderly, Kenerens Father vever likes that, He raps fingers and makes me do it over. I stop the telling only when the lamp burns down, Then I sleep right here over my words. The telling goes on as dream and when I wake it takes a while to pull away, leave this room and do my Chares.

TK Misters, Lila, Soledad

TK 1055 of the Smithy There is no more poom in this room. The floor is covered. From Now yor will stand to read me The walls make trouble because lamp light is too Small to see by I am holding it in one hand and Knife writing with the other. My arms ache so but it is good to tell this. I am wear the door and at the close. Luddenly I am remembering. In want read my telling. You don't know how to Sont laugh. Maybe one day you will learn. If so, you will come to this house again, Climb the Stains and enter this room in daylight. Then these Careful wards, clased up and pearet world tell themselves, Round and round, pede To pide, bottom to top, top to bottom all acran the world that is this room, Mothing drains out I me here. Here lam florens. IN full. Enclosed and who can pay?

Slaughter Jane books eggs and when cool wrap them in TK. She folds a blanket and hands it to me, motioning with two fingers to follow. We leave the house scurrying abound to the backyard. Through the confer. Chickens cluck and fly from our feet. We run through the pasture, One con turns to look. The other does not. We duck between the Islats. I the fence and enter the frees. Now we walk, softly, Laughten Vare leading the way. The Sun speaks into the tree Shadow ... Birds are still eastery ... We come to a dry stream - dry mostly, muddy in places. Daughter Jane tells me how to go, where the wagon had will be that takes me to you. I say thank you and lift her hand to kins it. She says No. His/who thank you. I step down into the drybed

I turn and look up at her. line you a demon lask her. Her wayward eye is steady. The smales.
